Law Enforcement Officer Deaths 2009

A Tale of Two Trends: Overall Fatalities Fall, Fatal Shootings on the Rise

Preliminary data shows that officers deaths declined 7%, from 133 in 2008 to 124 in 2009. That is the fewest line-of-duty deaths since 1959, when there were 108. 2009 reduction was driven largely by a steep drop in traffic-related deaths.

This encouraging news is offset by a disturbing rise in the number of officers shot and killed in 2009. Firearms related fatalities increased by 23% to 48 in 2009, from 39 in 2008.

Once again responding to domestic disturbance calls proved to be particularly dangerous for American law enforcement officers during 2009 with a total of 11 officers killed.

Unprovoked ambush attacks claimed another 6 officers lives.

North Carolina ranked 4th highest in the nation with 7 officers killed in-the-line-of-duty.

Nearly one-third of this year's firearms-related fatalities—15 deaths in all—occurred in just five incidents in which more than one officer was fatally shot by the same gunman.

March: four Oakland (CA) Police Officers killed following a traffic stop and subsequent barricade situation.

April: three Pittsburgh (PA) Police officers ambushed by a heavily armed gunman wearing a bullet-resistant vest as the officers responded to a domestic disturbance call.

April: two Okaloosa County (FL) Sheriff's deputies gunned down while trying to arrest a domestic violence suspect.

July: two Seminole County (OK) Sheriff's deputies fatally shot while attempting to serve an arrest warrant.

November: four Lakewood (WA) Police officers executed in a local coffee shop as they planned their upcoming shift.
